Talking

Keeping up our chatting will keep calm, open channels of communication and aid us to spot any uncharacteristic behaviour. Chatting allows us to model being kind and keeping things positive online whilst gently reinforcing our rules of only talking to others we know in person. We can start to be quite frank about the dangers our children face.

Social Media

Social Media is not something to rush into. In the short term, it can have an impact on mental health from peer pressure, bullying and false information. Likewise, over sharing of information, exposure to inappropriate content such as gang glamorising, obscene language and sexualised dancing can impact lives for years to come. The legal minimum age for most sites is 13 years old, parents of anyone underage can be legally responsible for their actions.

Issues

Should children raise any issues with you, keep calm and show you are listening. Follow house rules if you feel any actions need consequences. Take any screenshots possible and block the other person if felt necessary.

1 - Broadband controls

Use Internet Matters guides to set up parental controls on your broadband router. Decide which websites and services each device can access. Set a strong router password.

2 - Device Set-up

Set up parental controls before giving devices to children, check Internet Matters for a set up guide. Use all the settings available, reducing the restrictions if appropriate. There may be times of frustration but stick by them.

3 - Agree boundaries

Agree your boundaries, such as screen time allowance, devices only used in communal areas and how new apps are to be decided on. Agree on shared access to an email address and what accounts children may use. Decide what happens if rules aren't followed. Remember to regularly check these are being followed and parental settings are maintained.

4 - Choosing apps

It is important you still keep control and make informed decisions using app guides. Like film certificates, PEGI reviews games for adult themes such as sex, violence and gambling content to give minimum age ratings. Stand by your decisions and discuss them with other parents. Following PEGI ratings will help prevent children being exposed to harmful content and desensitisation.
